The Benefits of Fatherhood Programs in Community-Based Organizations
What Fathers Need from Community-Based Organizations (CBOs)

There are many challenges faced by fathers in America, and more specifically, by those who participate in responsible fatherhood programs. But what are they?

The Fatherhood Research and Practice Network (FRPN) recently released a brief that attempts to answer that question. (NFI President Christopher Brown sits on the FRPN's advisory committee). Answering that question is critical because these challenges may be, as the brief notes, strongly associated with lower levels of father involvement in children's lives and lower quality co-parenting relationships.

FRPN's Dr. Jay Fagan and Rebecca Kaufman interviewed fathers from nine responsible fatherhood programs in five cities in the northeast that serve primarily low-income, unmarried, non-residential fathers about the challenges they face.

The top 5 challenges the fathers mentioned in descending order of frequency were:

- Unemployment
- Lack of money to buy things for their children
- Inability to pay child support
- Difficulty keeping a job
- Inability to pay bills

The other challenges they mentioned were wide-ranging, from physical health problems to their living situation preventing their children from coming to see them, to drug/alcohol use, to being accused of abusing/neglecting their children.

These challenges underscore one of the most vital pieces of guidance National Fatherhood Initiative (NFI) has provided to organizations through the years: the importance of helping fathers meet their most immediate, pressing needs as part of or even before enrolling them in a responsible fatherhood program. Meeting these needs is often the “hook” that encourages fathers to enroll in a responsible fatherhood program and to maintain their participation rather than learning how to be a better father and parent (e.g. through increased knowledge of child development, child discipline, etc.).
Indeed, helping fathers overcome these challenges should be a component of a responsible fatherhood program either through the provision of services (often called "wrap-around services") by the organization running the program or the organization's partners.

The FRPN's findings are similar to the results of research that Mr. Brown conducted with Dr. Keith Cherry, his long-time colleague and friend, when NFI was part of the National Quality Improvement Center on Non-Resident Fathers and the Child Welfare System (QIC-NRF), a 5-year project (2006-2011) funded by the Children's Bureau in the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services through a contract with the American Humane Association. That research involved interviews with low-income, non-resident fathers involved in the child welfare system in four communities supplemented by interviews with fatherhood program practitioners who worked with these and other child-welfare involved fathers.

Like the fathers interviewed by the FRPN researchers, the fathers Dr. Cherry and Mr. Brown interviewed also mentioned financial challenges as their most pressing needs. Their research (published in the journal Protecting Children) also involved delving deeper into the impact of these fathers’ challenges on the fathers and their perceptions so that child welfare workers and fatherhood practitioners within and who work with the child welfare system could better understand these fathers and, as a result, work more effectively with them and develop better strategies to encourage enrollment in fatherhood programs offered by child welfare agencies.
The interviews identified the following themes in the lives of these fathers:

- The financial and emotional devastation caused by their own absence from their children’s lives.
- The belief that they are constantly extorted by the mother of their children with their children being bargaining chips in a constant tug-of-war between them and the mother in which the mother has the upper hand.
- The loss of control over their lives and hopelessness about the future.
- The belief that the judicial/court system fosters poor fatherhood.
- This deep understanding of these fathers' lives is so critical to effective program delivery.

Staff of responsible fatherhood programs must look not only at fathers' needs but how those needs affect fathers. It is those affects that drive fathers' behavior. Indeed, the most successful of the programs studied during our participation in the QIC-NRF were those seen by fathers to meet fathers’ needs and care about fathers' welfare.

Next we will look at why evidence-based interventions are key to successful fatherhood programs.
A recent global review* concluded that parenting interventions must do a better job of including and engaging fathers. It also concluded that evaluations of interventions' impact should include separate analyses of fathers and mothers rather than parents in general. And you, the Community-Based Organization, can do something about it.

It is vital to engage fathers in parenting interventions separately from mothers (we call them "fatherhood" or "fathering" programs) and that more funding needs to be focused on the impact of father-specific or father-inclusive parenting interventions.

The team of UK and US researchers examined 199 published articles on parenting interventions that included at least some discussion of father engagement and impact. The researchers uncovered three specific problems when it comes to interventions' inclusion of fathers:

- Despite the evidence of fathers substantial impact on child development, well-being, and family functioning, parenting interventions rarely target men, or make a dedicated effort to include them.
- Parenting interventions that have included men as parents or co-parents give insufficient attention to reporting on father participation and impact.
- A fundamental change in the design and delivery of parenting interventions is required to overcome pervasive gender biases and to generate robust evidence on outcomes, differentiated by gender and by couple effects in evaluation.

It is the final problem that is most damning. It has has led to parenting interventions, focused on mothers, that will never reach their full potential to improve child well-being. There is a gender bias in parenting interventions that reflects a broader, global, damaging bias that says fathers aren't as important as mothers when it comes to child well-being. It is the most pervasive barrier we've encountered in our more than 20 years of existence.

How does NFI address this barrier? The first part of that answer is evident to most people. We've created evidence-based and evidence-informed programs, workshops, and other resources designed specifically for and that engage fathers.

The second part of that answer is not as evident. We’ve created workshops and other resources that build the capacity of organizations to engage fathers, such as our Father Friendly Check-Up™, that transform the culture of those organizations to value fathers as much as mothers in improving parenting behavior and, consequently, child-well being. We’ve said for many years—preached, really—that because the culture, infrastructure, and staff training of most organizations are designed to serve the needs of women and mothers that they are ill-suited for effectively engaging fathers. They create a mindset that focuses programs, services, and staff on mothers. As a result, organizations must examine and, as is the case in almost every instance, change their norms, the attitudes and beliefs of staff, and improve infrastructure to effectively serve all parents.

Parenting interventions will never truly be parenting interventions until they are implemented within organizational cultures that value fathers as partners in parenting who are critical to child well-being. The sad fact is it isn't that difficult to do. It simply takes “gumption.” Gumption involves courage, initiative, aggressiveness, and good old common sense.

The good news is that more organizations than ever are rolling up their sleeves to take a hard, long look at their efforts to improve parenting and child well-being. Several examples include state and local government agencies that have worked with NFI to integrate fatherhood programming among the organizations they fund. In Texas, for example, NFI led a project that integrates father engagement in home visiting programs. We helped the state design an approach that, in turn, helped the human service organizations it funds to design customized approaches to engaging fathers. These approaches improved the organizations’ use of evidence-based programs, such as Nurse-Family Partnership, Parents as Teachers, and Home Instruction for Parents of Preschool Youngsters, while maintaining fidelity to the programs' models which, not surprisingly, are focused on mothers.
In this section, we will focus on 8 societal issues (or fatherhood challenges) that father-specific programming helps you address.

1. Child Well-Being

Twenty-four (24) million children in America live apart from their biological fathers. In some urban communities, the father absence rates are closer to 80 percent. Sadly, 18+ million of these children have limited contact with their nonresident dads. This absence leads to a number of risks to a child’s health and well-being. There is a direct correlation between child well-being and improving the skills of fathers and helping them understand the importance of their role in their children’s lives.

For example:

- Children from father-absent homes are two times more likely to be obese.*
- The poverty rate among children in father-absent homes is four times higher than among children in two-parent homes.

Anything you can do to encourage fathers’ involvement in their children's' lives goes a long way toward child well-being.

2. Father Involvement

There are many reasons that a father may not be involved with his children. And unfortunately, many excellent social service programs focus mainly (or solely) on resources for mothers and children. But what about skill-building for fathers? How are you serving them?

From your organization’s intake forms, to the attitudes and behaviors of staff, to the family programs offered, it's important to consider father-focused programs and resources in your work. Often, increased father involvement is a “means to an end” because an involved father brings many benefits to mothers and children.

So you may be wondering: What should we offer fathers? How do we start a fatherhood program and recruit dads? How can we keep dads coming once we get them involved?

Enter NFI’s low, medium, and high intensity fatherhood skill-building resources that help you customize fatherhood programs to engage dads in a way that is unique for your organization and setting. Learn more about our fatherhood programs and resources at www.fathersource.org.

3. Child Welfare

Father absence is not one single issue. With 24 million children going through their day without the love and support of their father, we are facing a crisis in child well-being that affects all aspects of child welfare.

For example:

- Children from father-absent homes are more likely to be abused.
- Studies show that a “father hunger” appears in children within 1-3 months after a father is suddenly absent, causing the child to experience nightmares, sleeplessness, and night terrors.
- A study of 3,400 middle-school students indicated that not living with both biological parents quadruples the risk of having an affective disorder.

The presence of a child’s father in the home lowers the likelihood that a child will be abused. One possible reason for this connection is the very important role that fathers often play as the “protector” of their children. The facts are clear that children are safe when their dad lives in their home.

For these reasons and more, it is important to provide father-focused, skill-building resources that helps fathers not only understand their role as a man, but also the importance of their involvement as a father.

4. Maternal & Child Health

A child’s health is directly tied to his or her father’s presence. From emotional and behavioral issues, to sexual activity and abuse and neglect, father absence affects many issues related to child health. Moms can encourage father involvement, and in doing so, father involvement is increased.

For example:

- Children from father-absent homes are at a two times greater risk of infant mortality.
- Children from father-absent homes are two times more likely to be obese.

However, when dads are involved:

- Babies are healthier, with fewer complications at birth, four times more likely to celebrate their first birthday, less likely to experience sudden infant death syndrome, and have improved learning and emotional development.
- Children are more likely to go to well-baby visits, and have higher developmental scores and fewer behavior problems later in life.

Dads and moms need to understand the importance of father involvement, and the benefits to their children. In fact, the importance of moms’ need in this area is why NFI created resources for moms, to help them understand the importance of father involvement, and how to include dad in the lives of their children for the benefit of the children.
5. Expectant/New Fathers and Healthcare Settings

Fatherhood resources make sense in healthcare settings (e.g. pregnancy and birthing centers and hospitals), and anywhere else you can reach new or expectant dads (e.g. home visits with pregnant and new parents). When there is a crisis pregnancy, for example, the crisis is often that the father of the baby is unable or unwilling to be involved in its life.

Science reveals that mothers don’t have the market cornered when it comes to being biologically connected to their children. Nature provides a way for men to prepare for the arrival of their children and to bond with them well after birth. In her ground-breaking book The Male Brain*, neuropsychologist Louann Brizendene points out that men’s hormone levels change during the pregnancy of their partners. Specifically, men’s levels of cortisol (the “stress hormone”) increase. This change puts men’s brains on “alert” for the arrival of their babies. In contrast, men’s levels of testosterone (the “wandering hormone”) decrease. This change lowers their competiveness, aggression, and sex drive.

It is during this time that expectant/new fathers are most open to fatherhood skill-building and preparing for their baby. Take advantage of this opportunity to help expectant/new fathers understand the importance of their involvement right from the start.

6. Substance Abuse & Mental Health

Children are more likely to use and abuse drugs when they grow up without an involved, responsible, and committed father. Drugs and alcohol often serve as surrogates for children who experience a lack of love from and an emotional connection with their fathers.

Father absence creates mental health issues as well. Research reveals that within one to three months, the child of a father absent father can experience nightmares, sleeplessness, and night terrors. There is a strong correlation between father absence and emotional and behavioral problems. Consider these facts:

• Children of single mothers show higher levels of aggressive behavior than children born to married mothers.
• Youth without a highly involved father are more at risk of first substance use.

7. Poverty & Crime

With 24 million children in America living daily without their biological fathers—one in three children—there is a father factor in poverty and crime.

For example:

- Children from father-absent homes are four times more likely to be poor.
- A child with an incarcerated father is seven times more likely to become incarcerated.

Father absence and poverty are strongly related. Data show that it’s more difficult to get fathers to provide financial support when they are not married to the mother and when they lack an emotional connection to their children.

Furthermore, the “story behind the story” of a violent crime committed in America reveals a “crime of fatherlessness.” Good fathers serve as regulators of aggressive behavior, particularly for young boys. But it’s not just boys, the fastest growing prison population is young girls and women, many of whom have grown up in father-absent homes.

By engaging fathers in the lives of their children, you can help reduce poverty and crime.

8. Workforce Development

Many children in America have limited contact with their nonresident dads. This lack of contact leads to a host of risks to their well-being, from teen pregnancy and drug abuse, to poverty, to poor performance at school. Unfortunately, many fathers believe that if they don’t have a job, then they don’t have anything valuable to contribute to their children’s lives. Therefore, we need to create sustained partnerships at the local level to help connect dads to fathering skills and jobs.

Helping a dad understand his importance as a dad will give him the motivation he needs to get and keep a job, which will also help him feel valuable to his children and society. This feeling of importance and value is especially important for fathers who have been incarcerated.
CBOs Having Success with Fatherhood

There are thousands of organizations across the nation incorporating fatherhood resources and programs into their everyday efforts to serve fathers and families, and you can, too. By partnering with NFI, there are many ways for your organization to promote responsible fatherhood. Here are some suggestions:

1. Take NFI's Father Friendly Check-Up™: This tool helps you assess how your organization encourages (or doesn't encourage) father involvement in the activities and programs offered by your organization. Get it at http://www.fatherhood.org/ffcu.

2. Start small: Add fatherhood skill-building resources such as brochures, tip cards, or pocket guides to your organization's offerings (e.g. in waiting rooms, at one-on-one sessions, at events, and in goodie bags).

3. Consider offering a one-time workshop for dads or moms: NFI's FatherTopics™ Booster Sessions help you cover important issues related to fatherhood, such as communication, domestic violence, and mothers’ gatekeeping behavior. Learn more at: http://store.fatherhood.org/fathertopics-workshops/.

4. Read NFI's free eBook “7 Steps to Starting a Fatherhood Program.” Download it here: http://www.fatherhood.org/start-fatherhood-program-ebook. You will learn about:
   - Making the Case for a Fatherhood Program
   - Assessing the Father Friendliness of Your Organization
   - Focusing Your Efforts on the Type(s) of Fathers You Will Serve
   - Selecting the Right Resources and Programs
   - Preparing for a Sustainable Fatherhood Program
   - Funding Your Fatherhood Program
   - Launching Your Fatherhood Program and Measuring the Results

5. If you are looking to create a larger, city, or statewide fatherhood initiative, NFI’s Community Mobilization Approach™ is the tool you need. Learn more here: http://www.fatherhood.org/community-mobilization-ebook.

In the following pages, we’ll cover two organizations using NFI programs. But watch out, they just might give you some ideas and inspiration for how to incorporate fatherhood into your organization’s everyday efforts! Thank you in advance for all you do (and will do) in your organization to give children the involved fathers they so desperately need.
Recently, Catholic Charities’ Asylum Hill Family Center was featured in the Catholic Transcript Online—the Newspaper of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Hartford Connecticut. They’ve used NFI’s 24/7 Dad® group-based program to reach over 600 dads in the last 2 years.

But they don't just offer the 24/7 Dad® program—they offer other "wrap around" services to residents, such as parenting skills, advocacy/empowerment, job training and support, homeownership training, money management/budgeting classes, and more. You see, 24/7 Dad® and wrap around services fit well together.

The 24/7 Dad® program is an ideal compliment to wrap around services because the program speaks to why men do what they do. Fatherhood can provide men with a greater context and purpose for life, and when you tap into that, you can make significant inroads in the other service areas as well. Motivating men to care more about their children is a great way to capture the heart of a man, and 24/7 Dad® does just that.

Speaking of motivation, the Catholic Transcript article features Kyle Parrish (pictured right), under age 21, in a relationship, and father to a son who’s just barely a year old. Because of an injury on the job, bills and stress mounted as he waited on a worker's compensation settlement. One day, he walked into a store in the same building as the Asylum Hill Family Center and began talking with one of the center's Pathways to Responsible Fatherhood program representatives. A year later, Parrish had participated in the center's 24/7 Dad® program and wrap around services, and says he feels like a new man.
"We went from talking about my situation to him saying he might be willing to help me. But at the same time, I had to be willing to help myself," Mr. Parrish said. "I had to partake in it; otherwise [my situation] wasn’t going to change."

Lois Nesci, CEO of Catholic Charities, said the program began about two years ago because fathers were an underserved segment of the population. "As they’ve [fathers] developed the skills for employment, their self-confidence increases," she said.

She went on to say, "Although they were somewhat involved in the lives of their children, they recognized, and we recognized, that they needed to learn better parenting skills. Furthermore, they needed to learn ways to be more engaged with their children and their families and to develop the resources in order to become more self-sufficient. In addition to parenting skills, we also provide them with classes in financial literacy and also help them build their employment skills."

And that's great news because, according to Mr. Parrish, the 24/7 Dad® fatherhood program has helped him:

- In his relationship with his son’s mother. Specifically, to show her that he’s doing something constructive to be a better father.
- Learn how to better interact with women, and deal with their expectations.
- Understand the demands and responsibility of being a father—that it's more than just providing financially and picking up his child from school.
- Learn to take care of himself and be healthy so that he can physically be there for his child.

Fathers can learn all this and more through the 24/7 Dad® program. In fact, NFI Staff has trained CBOs from many different sectors all across the country to offer 24/7 Dad®. These CBOs include:

- Pregnancy Care Centers
- Recovery Centers
- Transitional Housing/Reentry Facilities
- Rescue Missions
- Workforce Development Organizations
- Head Start / Early Head Start
- Community Action Agencies
- Social Service / Human Service Agencies
"Any man can be a father, it takes someone special to be a dad." These words have been said for years. But the Teen Outreach Pregnancy Services (TOPS) program in Arizona has taken action on this saying by offering the TOPS DAD Program as one of their teen-focused, pregnancy outreach programs. TOPS is located in Pima, Maricopa, Yavapai, and Gila counties.

TOPS’ mission is to create healthy outcomes for children, their families, and the community. Their goal is to educate and empower the youth and young families in communities so they can make informed, healthy decisions. Their vision is to be available to the adolescent population and their families throughout the state. Through education and support programs on pregnancy and sexual health issues, TOPS aims to improve the health and well-being of their communities for generations to come.

TOPS maintains that a father’s love is just as important as a mother’s love to a child’s development, and sometimes even more so. That’s why they offer the TOPS DAD program, which works with fathers of all ages, teaching them to be involved in their children’s lives, and to raise healthy children by instilling the “Dad Factor.” The Dad Factor means that every dad has a unique and special gift he brings to raising his child. The TOPS DAD program, through peer support, one-on-one facilitation, and group sessions, gives dads the tools and confidence they need to be involved in their children’s lives, and becoming the dad they want to be.

TOPS uses National Fatherhood Initiative’s 24/7 Dad®. Dads learn everything from communication and co-parenting strategies, to tips on connecting with their child and how to discipline. And the offerings for dads don't stop there. Dads are also welcomed and encouraged to attend all TOPS events, including healthy pregnancy, childbirth, and parenting classes.
